Dear Friends,

For thirteen years, I measured my life in waiting: waiting for test results, for appointments, and for a call that might never come. At twenty-four, my mom gave me one of her kidneys. What she really gave me was time. Time to watch my sister get married. Time to welcome my nephew into the world. Time for all the ordinary days I once wasn't sure I'd get. I've never stopped being grateful for a single one of them.

I've also never forgotten what it took to get here: the uncertainty before, the fear and fragility during, and the long, quiet work of recovery after. The Butterfly Effect was born from a simple promise that no one touched by organ donation should ever feel as alone as we once did, at any stage of the journey.

"A donor doesn't just give an organ. They give someone time: to be there, to hold on, to live the moments that matter most."

Today we walk beside individuals and families before, during and after transplant. We care for the mental and physical health of recipients and donors alike, and we advocate so that more people get the time I was given.

That's why this year's gala is built around the gift of time. One person gives another years they were never promised, and two lives become joined forever, like the two wings of the same butterfly.

This April, we gather to honour every donor who gave someone more time, and every family still waiting for theirs. I would be so honoured to have you there beside us. Every seat, every table, and every gift gives someone a little more time to hold on.

Thank you for believing that a small act of kindness can ripple farther than any of us will ever know.

Sincerely

Emily Fusco
